LOUDFOOT JOINS THE CITY FATHERS

NEW COUNCILLOR IS ELECTED BY ACCLAMATION ON NOMINATION DAY

On Monday, when Returning Officer Kenny sat for the purpose of receiving nominations to fill the vacant seat on the Town Council caused by the retirement of Ex-Councillor G. Petris who has now moved away, only one name was placed in nomination for the onerous position.

Shortly after the opening of the one-hour session the paper for Mr. William G. Loudfoot, signed by Messrs J. W. Stuart, W. E. Washburn, H. L. Cork and S. R. Bowerman as nominators, was handed in and this being the only nomination at the closing hour, Mr. Kenny declared Mr. Loudfoot elected to the Town Council to complete the unfinished term, which ends in February next.

WEEK-END FARES CONTINUED BY RAILWAYS

Reduced week-end fares, good on all trains and between all stations in Canada, introduced this year by Canadian railways as an experimental measure, will be continued in effect until October 31st. Under this arrangement, return tickets are issued, at the rate of one and a quarter times the ordinary one way fare, the going portion good on all trains leaving after noon Friday and returning on all trains leaving up to midnight on the following Monday. The provision of these reduced fares has improved the facilities for week-end travel in all parts of the Dominion and has provided cheaper week-end outings between city and country areas and vice versa.

The reduced fares were first placed in effect during May, June and July, with a view of stimulating week-end travel and making these journeys between points in Canada easier and more economical.

We are sorry to learn that Mrs. T. Hill has had to return to hospital for further treatment.

TREATMENT OF EXTERNAL PARASITES OF POULTRY

(Experimental Farms Note.)
The hot days of summer is the time that calls for close attention if the flock is to be kept free from external parasites.

Body Lice—If the surroundings are kept in a clean sanitary condition and a dust bath is provided, not much trouble will be occasioned with body lice so long as the birds are in good health, but let any bird get out of condition and it becomes a veritable propagating place for lice. These lice however, are no great menace as they may be readily controlled. There are numerous lice powders on the market, any one of which will get good results. Ordinary fine road dust with a little flour of sulphur added, about a quarter of a pound of sulphur to a quart of road dust, will be found to give satisfactory results, when carefully dusted through the feathers. Blue ointment, a piece about the size of a small pea rubbed below the vent and underneath the wings, will also prove efficacious but the latter should not be used on setting hens. The most convenient remedy, however, that has been tried out at the Central Experimental Farm in Black Leaf 40, which can be purchased from any seed merchant. Paint the sides of the roosts immediately before the birds go to roost and the fumes will effectively rid the birds of all vermin.

Mites—Mites are a much more serious menace to the poultryman's profits as they are much harder to get rid of than the body lice, but here again cleanliness is absolutely essential in the past is to be successfully coped with.

When mites are found to be present, the first step in banishing them is to give the house a thorough cleaning. Remove all droppings and old nesting material, scrape and sweep out every particle of dirt and burn it. Then if water pressure is available turn on the hose, forcing the water to every crack; if, as is the case on most farms, you cannot use this method it is advisable to scrub down the walls with a brush or old broom but in any case they should be thoroughly sprayed or painted with a good strong disinfectant. This wash should be repeated in a few days to destroy the mites which hatch after the first application. The disinfectant may be applied with a hand spray pump, or if one is not available, a brush will do, but in either case the fluid should be used liberally and every crack flooded.

A good strong solution of any of the coal tar disinfectants commonly offered for sale will prove effective. Ordinary coal oil will kill the mites but as it evaporates quickly the effects are not lasting. An excellent "paint" to apply to the roosts and nest boxes is composed of one part coarse carbolic or possibly better still Black Leaf 40 to three or four parts of crank case oil.

Even after the house has been cleaned, the cracks in the roosts and nest boxes should be flooded at regular intervals throughout the summer either with the aforementioned "paint" or with coal oil.

For further information write to the poultry Division, Central Experimental Farm for circular No. 80.

Owing to the stormy weather on Friday last, the trip arranged by the local Oddfellows to visit their brethren at Chauvin had to be postponed.

POOLS TO OPERATE ELEVATOR SYSTEMS

EXPECT ALTA. ORGANIZATION TO ANNOUNCE OPEN MARKET
SELLING POLICY

REGINA—Repayment of Canada wheat pool indebtedness will be made out of the earnings of the three provincial pool elevator systems.

Provincial pool elevator systems will continue to function in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta as the property of the provincial wheat pools.

Announcement of the basis of operation in each province will be made shortly by Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Definite announcement of a modification of growers' contracts to permit pool members to sell their 1931 and 1932 crops on the open market with the option of delivering to the pool and accepting the prevailing initial payment was made Monday following a session of pool delegates in Calgary last week.

The new policy is effective as from July 16 and holds to the end of the present contract, covering marketing of the 1931 and 1932 crops.

Word was received from the Winnipeg Underwriters Association that through the efforts of the Town Council in having the Town re-surveyed for fire insurance purposes, on account of the excellent fire protection system which is now in perfect working order and the class of buildings in the business section, the insurance rate has been cut approximately 15% on all buildings, business and residential. This does not effect any policies in force but will go into effect on new policies and renewals.

Any cancellations of policies would have to be put through on the short term rate which would not effect any savings. Wainwright is now classed as a second, instead of a third-class town for insurance purposes. This will mean a great reduction over a period of years and give the residents an opportunity to carry fire insurance on account of the low rate.

In a second-class town all property can be insured for 100% of its value instead of 80% as heretofore. This with a decrease in the tax rate and an increase in some of the business houses on account of the greater drawing power of the fine stores erected since the fire, shows Wainwright in a very favorable position in spite of the depression. When times pick up WATCH HER GROW. Good houses for rent are at a premium which is just another sign that Wainwright is the best town in Northern Alberta.

Repayment of the Canada wheat pool's 1929 indebtedness to the provincial governments, spread over a period of 20 years, will be made out of the earnings of the elevator systems under a fiscal policy "which will present no obstacle whatever to the operation of the elevator facilities of the three provincial pools."

Such are the four points of Canada wheat pool organization and fiscal policy decided by Premier J. T. M. Anderson of Saskatchewan, Premier John Bracken of Manitoba, and Premier J. E. Brownlee of Alberta, at the conclusion of a two-day conference in Regina Friday.

Western Canada's 1931-32 grain owned by the Canada wheat pools, will be marketed through the provincial pool elevator systems "which will continue to function in the interests of the farmer" states the official statement.

ALBERTA FAVORS BAG REDUCTIONS FOR DUCK SEASON

EDMONTON—Reduction of bag limits on duck shooting in the prairie provinces was favored at a joint meeting of the Edmonton branch and the Alberta Fish and Game League Friday. It was felt that the supply was falling off for the fall season and some greater means of protection were necessary.

Discussion showed, however, that while the Canadian sportsmen might be prepared to take this step, there should be co-operation on the part of the United States game authorities. It was pointed out, for instance, that the seasons are longer and bag limits larger south of the border, and if no change were made it would be little to the prairie provinces being steps to give the birds protection on this side of the line.

INSURANCE RATES REDUCED AND TAX RATES DECREASED

Word was received from the Winnipeg Underwriters Association that through the efforts of the Town Council in having the Town re-surveyed for fire insurance purposes, on account of the excellent fire protection system which is now in perfect working order and the class of buildings in the business section, the insurance rate has been cut approximately 15% on all buildings, business and residential. This does not effect any policies in force but will go into effect on new policies and renewals.

BANK OF MONTREAL SIXTH CROP REPORT

The current issue of the Bank of Montreal crop report states that general showers in all three Prairie Provinces have been beneficial during the past week and the condition of crops and pastures now show improvement on the whole, except in those large areas in Saskatchewan and parts of Manitoba where the crops were destroyed by drought. In all the other provinces in Canada, both East and West of the Prairies, the highly favorable outlook in regard to practicality of all crops continues. In Quebec harvesting of a crop of good quality is general. In Ontario cutting of fall wheat has begun, with a better than average crop assured. In the Maritime Provinces all crops are making good progress, while in British Columbia hay and cereals give indications of good yields. Details follow:

Prairie Provinces—In the northwest an area growing conditions are suitable and satisfactory per cent of the wheat is headed. In the southeastern area wheat is about eighteen inches high and practically all headed. In the western area conditions are favorable and about sixty per cent of the wheat is headed. Coarse grains are late and in most cases will produce feed only. In the northern and central parts of the area an average crop is expected but in the Lethbridge district further rain is required. The sugar beet crop is making good progress, Saskatchewan—in the northern area wheat crops although uneven and patchy in many sections are making progress and fifty to twenty-five per cent is now headed with an average height of twelve to fifteen inches. Coarse grains are backward but give fair promise. In the southern area wheat crops have improved in some sections but general conditions are unsatisfactory. Damaging winds and lack of moisture still retard growth. Re-seeding for fodder has been general over a wide area. Manitoba—Most of the wheat is in hand, with the average height about sixteen inches. Coarse grains are short but now are making progress, particularly late sown grains and summer-fallow crops. With favorable conditions, a fair wheat crop is indicated in the northern and part of the eastern areas, with prospects good at points along the Red River Valley. In the western area crops are practically a total failure in places and at best light crops can be expected.

FUTURE CATTLE MARKET IN WEST BRIGHT SAYS PRESIDENT OF EXCHANGE

An increasing export trade overseas in livestock, as seen by W. J. McGowan, President of the Winnipeg Livestock Exchange, who, with nine directors of the Exchange, have returned from a tour of the West over the Canadian National, for the purpose of making a survey of conditions.

Overseas shipments, according to Mr. McGowan, have netted remarkably good prices, so much so that winter-fed beef cattle are practically sold out. Cattle sales on the Winnipeg market have this year shown a 25 per cent increase over the same period of 1930. The hog market has been exceptionally good and the sheep and lamb market has held up well.

Included in the party was Charles Mayhew, President of the Canadian National Livestock Exchange, who was elected honorary vice-president of the American Livestock Exchange at St. Paul, marking the third time in 43 years that this honor has been conferred on a Canadian.

Mr. P. Hochhausen, of Provost, was over renewing acquaintances last week.

REV. A. M. TRENDLE ON ORANGEISM

SPLENDID ADDRESS AT ANNUAL CHURCH PARADE OF THE
L.O.L. MEMBERS

Favored with ideal weather, the annual church parade and service of Wainwright Loyal Orange Lodge No. 3098, and the L.O.B.A., on Sunday last proved to be one of the most largely attended functions of its nature seen in Wainwright.

The lengthy parade consisting of members of the two local lodges and representatives from nearly all lodges in the Alexandria county and vicinity assembled at the Masonic Hall and headed by the Town Band marched down Main street to the Memorial tower, and returned to the Elks theatre, where a large number were assembled to join the Orangemen and Orange ladies in divine service at 3 p.m.

Right Worshipful Rev Bro W. Brooker, provincial grand lodge chaplain for Alexandria county, presided and read the lesson, and Rev W. Huston led in prayer.

Worshipful Rev Bro. A. Trendle, county chaplain and chaplain of Wainwright lodge, delivered a forceful address, particularly stressing what true Orangemen meant and what it did not mean. The Orange order, he remarked, did not aim to tear down the ancient Roman Catholic religion or any other Christian religion; it stood to preserve Protestantism and freedom in religious matters. Whilst there are articles of Rome Catholic belief that Protestants can never accept, the speaker said, there are some people willing and ever ready to blacken the Roman Catholic but were doing nothing to assist or exemplify the protestant religion.

This, he said, was regrettable and destructive, whereas the teaching of the Orange order was constructive in every way and members should exercise their influence by living up to their obligation to combat the apathy and indifference which, in these days, can be found on all sides.

Further, in closing, he said we are becoming ever more conscious of an attitude of hostility against all forms of Christianity; a movement which has its center in Russia but whose influence is rapidly spreading through out the world. We needed to ask our selves what the Orange order is doing in a constructive way to face these issues and to ignore the destructive forces which are the outcome of narrow-mindedness and bigotry.

Let our motto be, he concluded, that which St. Paul has given us of being "kind to one another; tender hearted and forgiving" one another even as God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven us.

Well known hymns were sung during the service, the band supplying the suitable accompaniments, and after the National Anthem at the close the parade re-formed and proceeded to the United church where a short meeting was held by the members.

Mr. J. Wilkinson has been taken to hospital with a fractured elbow which he suffered in a slight accident last week end. He is progressing nicely.

Mrs. H. Trueman with her two daughters, Clare and Helen, are guests at the summer cottage of Mrs. J. Cuthbertson at House Lake for a short stay.

PAYMENTS ON EXPORTED WHEAT

GOVT TO MAKE PROVISION OF
FIVE CENTS A BUSHEL AS PROMISED

OTTAWA—A resolution providing for the payment of five cents on every bushel of wheat exported from the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan during the present year has been placed on the order paper of the House of Commons by Premier Bennett.

This implements the announcement made by Premier Bennett in his budget speech.

The resolution reads as follows: "Resolved that it is expedient to bring in a measure to provide that the Governor in Council may authorize the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of the sum of five cents on every bushel of wheat exported from the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan of the crop of 1931 and to make provision for the determination of amounts payable there under; and for regulations to carry out the purpose of the Act and prevent penalties to be incurred for breach of the Act or regulations."

Modernistic Maiden

By Fay Mulhollen

The country club veranda was deserted for it was yet too early in the evening for the dancers to begin drifting away by twos from the dance floor within. The orchestra, imported for the evening, screamed and cried its melody, then died away. There was much clapping and cries for more. The orchestra began again. One couple detached themselves from the swirling mass and came through the open French doors to the empty veranda.

A bright June moon shone down on the girl's face. She was dark and tiny yet somehow regal. Perhaps it was an effect due to the dress she wore—silver and white, in the so-called period of 1930, long and clinging, with unexpected swirls when she walked.

The music followed them, and the man hummed the tune, then sang the words.

"For she's the—
Atavistic—
Modernistic—
Type of a girl—
He broke off. Then what?" he asked.

The girl did not answer.

"That's you, Gay," the man continued. "You're like that music, Modernistic to your fingertips." He lifted one of her hands and regarded it. "I learned in psychology that you can't distinguish colors in the moonlight, but I can't see. Even here I can see that your nails are violently red. You must be modernistic—to the fingertips!"

"Quite," said Gay Strouville in the voice of a lady. Two years ago she would have said with a giggle, "Oh, gosh Dana, don't be so silly! But that was away back in 1928. Now she said regally, "Quite!" and disdained to watch away her hand as she would have done then.

Dana Mitchell laughed gayly. Dana was always gay and debonaire, a laughing blond who did everything casually but with a certain grace. He played polo with debonaire magnificence; in college he had played football brilliantly. But he had also made Phi Beta without even seeming to crack a book and now he was enormously successful in business in the same effortless way. Gay had heard her father declare more than once that Dana Mitchell was the smartest business man in town, in spite of the fact that he had only been at it for three years or so.

He was Ridgewood's biggest catch, but mothers and daughters fluttered and languished in vain. Dana Mitchell played his charms upon them all impartially. Tonight he was Gay Strouville's escort at the weekly country club dance, but next week it would be some other girl.

Everybody said that Gay Strouville was so modern. Always a jump ahead of the other girls in Ridgewood, it was Gay who set the pace for the others. She was the first to put her dresses down to her heels in jagged hemlines, and the first to jerk them back to three inches below her knees and straighten them out around the bottom.

Gay was the arbiter of the moods and attitudes of her particular group. There had been the Clara Bow era, when they were all merry and rollicking cut-ups; then the period of Greta Garbo, when the girls tried to turn vampish in an ethereal way. But now Gay had outgrown the movies. She was modernistic in the way that aluminum dining chairs and tables and cork ceilings are. The mode moderne—that was Gay Strouville.

The fact that she had been in love with Dana Mitchell all or practically all the years of her brief life accounted for it. Long, long ago she had read that to captivate a man a girl must be different from the other girls. Four or five years ago, that had been, and ever since Gay had been striving to be different in the only ways she knew. But just as soon as she started wearing her hair in a boyish bob all the other girls fell in line and did the same thing; and the next day after it was reported that Gay Strouville was letting her hair grow, all the younger crowd of Ridgewood decided to let their hair grow. That was the way it went. And now Gay Strouville was being modernistic in the period of 1930 and all the other girls were doing likewise.

Gay Strouville stood on the veranda beside the man she loved and sighed. As soon as those inside perceived that she was not dancing there would be a general exodus. She would be alone with Dana only a brief moment, and she was alone with him so seldom. She ought to do something about him.

He put his arms about her carelessly and drew her to him. For a brief moment his blue eyes laughed down in her dark ones and then he bent his head and kissed her for five heartbeats. He had never kissed her before. She was breathless. He lifted his head and released her, and with her heart pounding in a manner as old as time she waited to hear what he would say.

"Your technique has gone a little stale, Gay," he said judiciously. "Perhaps overtraining, don't you think?" She looked at him calmly. The clinical attitude—that was what she must strive to maintain. That was the modern thing. You watched your heart torn out by the roots and were interested in the process. But inside she was quivering with rage and a desire to burst into hysterical tears. She waited four years—since she was 16 for that kiss from Dana Mitchell and now that he had had it she said that her technique had gone stale. She set her teeth and faced him. "Perhaps you're right," she said carelessly. "I'd forgotten that you were considered the local connoisseur or I wouldn't have been so casual."

It was an effort to talk like that about the most wonderful thing that had ever happened to her, but she did it. After all, the clinical attitude must be maintained. It was Gay who had introduced the phrase and its meaning to Ridgewood.

"Whatever happens to you, you've got to accept it and analyze it as though it happened to somebody else. You're a scientist, observing an interesting experiment and it doesn't matter that it's also you who are being experimented on," Gay had explained to her friends. "You see?"

Not many of them did see, but they said very doubtfully that they did, and went about trying to live as though they did and succeeding not at all. For it takes a certain kind of mind to do that, and only Gay seemed to possess it.

She stood now by the side of the man that she loved and told herself fiercely that she must not care, she must not care. But as a matter of fact, she did. It was very discouraging.

Inside the orchestra was still playing that tune.... "Atavistic... Modernistic... da da da...."

"What's atavistic, anyway?" Gay asked suddenly.

Dana smiled at her condescendingly. "You don't know? Well, I dare say your father owns a dictionary. Look it up sometimes when you're not otherwise occupied."

She felt an impulse to stick out her tongue at him, but repressed it. Then other couples began drifting out into the night, in spite of the music, there were more people on the veranda than inside the club. Jerry Farrell came up to claim Gay for a dance and led her unprotestingly back to the ballroom.

"He murmured a word of farewell to Dana."

"They danced in silence a bit, then Jerry looked down at her and inquired, 'Why all the indigo? You seem awfully low.'"

"Do I?" she inquired, coming to with a start. She had been thinking about Dana.

You do. Is it because his Highness is departing?"

"What—what's that?" she asked startled.

"I inquired, 'Miss Absentminded, if you were blue because the heartbreaker is leaving these parts. Dana, you know.'"

"Leaving?" Somehow her voice sounded unnatural. "I hadn't heard it."

"I forgot you'd given up reading the newspapers, along with other childish pastimes. It was announced in the evening paper, Dana's going West to take charge of some new office. His company is opening up."

"West? Where?"

"Oh, Topeka or Omaha or some such place."

"Oh," said Gay Strouville. Well, she had to take it, and like it. Her own tragedy, and she had to sit back as a spectator and enjoy it. Just as the tragedienne enjoys a tragic play. Dana would go West and that would be the end of all her dreams. He'd remember her casually for a little while and then forget her. Men did, even men who were engaged. And she had not the faintest thread of claim on Dana.

"Do you know—when?" she asked in a small voice.

"Soon," he answered. "That's what the paper said, but it may mean tomorrow or next month."

As a matter of fact, it turned out that soon meant next week. Gay spoke about it on the way home, with an effort at careless indifference.

"They tell me you're leaving," she said. "When and for how long?"

"I didn't know you were interested in my comings and goings, Gay, or I'd have told you before. I'm leaving next Thursday. It may be for a month or it may be forever. It all depends on how things shape up out there."

Gay murmured that she was sure things would shape up as he wished them to, and then fell silent. She racked her brains for something to say that would shake him out of that smiling calm of his and make him sweep her into his arms. But there was nothing to do or say. Presently she stood on her own steps and bade him good night. Now, she thought, perhaps he'll kiss me again, and then—

"Night, Gay. I'm awfully busy getting off, but I'll try to get around to say good-by to you before I go. Save me a date, will you—say Wednesday—the night before I leave?"

"Wednesday?" She seemed to ponder. "I think it will be all right; if not, I'll give you a ring. 'Night."

"Fine!" He pressed her hand and was gone.

She must be modern, she told herself. It didn't mean anything—his coming to see her the night before he left. But she hoped that she could make it mean something.

On that Wednesday night before Dana's departure she changed her dress three times before she finally decided to let well enough alone. The dress she finally chose was black and

GUTTA PERCHA TIRES

GUM CUSHIONED

Accurate Curing—Timed to a Second

Machinery and equipment of the most modern type, much of it designed and perfected by "GP" Engineers, assure the production of tires of uniform wearing quality.

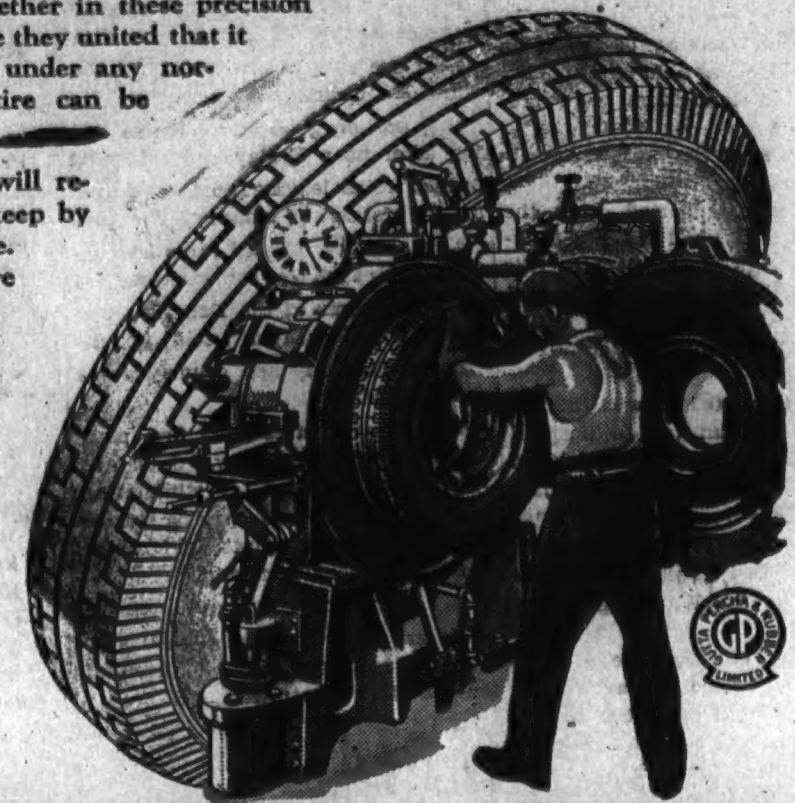

Much depends on the final operation in tire building—vulcanizing. The electrically time-controlled "watchcase" heaters insure absolute uniformity of curing. No human errors are possible. The Gum Cushioned carcass and the Resisto Tread are perfectly welded together in these precision vulcanizers—so thoroughly are they united that it is impossible to separate them under any normal conditions to which a tire can be subjected.

The purchase of "GP" tires will reduce the cost of your car upkeep by increasing your tire mileage. There's a Gum Cushion Tire Station in your district. Call around and get acquainted.

BROTHER FROM MU

Continued

Dana Sowerby arose and surveyed his brothers with a slight tinge of superiority. With his long, thin legs and long thin nose, he called to mind a red-headed stork. Dana returned to the subject of his former question.

"Without seeming to criticize our esteemed brother from Mu, may I ask what we are going to do about him tomorrow night? He is coming over to help rush Sawtelle Strawbridge, you know."

"Why not just tell him to clear out? a sophomore suggested."

"We can't do a thing like that," protested Grommett.

"May I offer a solution?"

"Let's have it, Dana."

"It's very simple. Brother Grommett has done Duke the honor of falling for his girl. So Duke takes him out there tomorrow night, and that keeps him away from here."

Duke's protests were drowned in a chorus of delighted cheers, but finally he made himself heard.

"That's a hot idea. Sit him on your girl, Dana. Why don't you?"

"I would in a minute, but it would not work. He's fallen for you, Dana. What is the matter with you? Afraid of competition from an ape like that?"

"No, you fool, that's just it. What would I take with Melie if I took that bruiser out there? I can't do a thing like that."

"Where's your fraternity spirit?"

"Yeah, for dear old Beta Xi," added some one else. Everybody laughed, but Duke. He was up a tree, which Dana proceeded to cut down under him.

"Do you want the Pi Rho's to have the laugh on us? You're a fine wash-out of a Rushing Committee."

"All right, all right," Duke knew when to give up.

Meeting adjourned, after one more feeble attempt to get the regular business done, and Dana and Beanie descended upon the victim.

"Better call her up right now and be sure she doesn't make another date," they urged.

"What's the big idea? It's one o'clock in the morning."

"You know darn well she'll be up," Duke was escorted to the phone room.

"This is a terrible thing you're making me do," he was still protesting as he picked up a telephone from under the wall phone. Gladly he took off the receiver and called a number.

"Five cents please," came over the wire.

Obligingly Duke thumped the bottom of the telephone with the cobbler's stone. There was the tinkle of a bell, and he was connected.

"Hello, hello. Is that you, Melie? Have you done your good deed today? Certainly I'm not going to tell you who I am. I'm hurt, deeply hurt, that you don't know my sweet voice."

"Get going, will you?" hoarse whisper from Beanie. "Can the apple sauce."

"Well, seriously, how about my coming out tomorrow night? You wouldn't let a date with an ape like that stand between us, would you?"

"Call him up and tell him the game's been called on account of rain. No, now listen, Melie this is serious. What I mean is, there's one of the cellar gang we've got to get out of the way tomorrow night or we'll lose the best freshman in the class, and he's fallen for you—love at first sight, very romantic. You'll know why he's on the cellar gang when you see him. He's the roughest diamond that ever came out west. Listen, Melie, if you'll help me out on this I'll mortgage the old home and we'll have ourselves a real party on pledge night—there and supper and everything."

"You're a real sport, Melie. Maybe I better prepare you for the shock. He's a great big bruiser right off the range with a four-button suit and never wears a hat. Goah, you're a real sport, Melie. Don't forget our blow-out pledge night. Nighty nighty."

"Duke hung up and turned on Dana and Beanie. "Nice pile of jack it's going to cost me squaring myself with Melie, if I ever can square myself. I'll be just so much deadwood to saw off and burn up when she sees that tag."

Duke, faultlessly arrayed against the elements in black Chesterfield with velvet collar, white-silk scarf, and a this year's derby, pulled up in front of a rooming house just as the battered brother from Mu descended the steps.

"Hi! I've been looking for you all day."

Grommett came over to the battered four-year-old sport model. "That so?" he inquired pleasantly. "What's eating you?"

"Acute clinical clouded Duke's eyes but he managed to continue with friendly warmth. "How about stepping out to-night?"

Reflectively the big fellow munched something. Duke wondered whether it was cigar, tobacco, or gum.

"Where to?" Grommett asked at last. "Out to see my girl. I had her at the gym yesterday, remember?"

Grommett did remember. "She sure is a sweet dish, Broh Fletcher"—it was evident that he was being torn in opposite directions—and it's mighty white of you to ask me, but I've promised the boys at the house to help me with crew freshman and they'll be counting on me up there. I can't go back on the fret."

"And then we settled down to a long steady stroke—was the last Duke heard as he quietly closed the front door. He coasted silently for a distance, then let the clutch in and sped to the house. There he found Elbridge Sawtelle Strawbridge already ensconced in the stuffed chair in Beanie's room—always used for sweet sessions because it had the best furniture Beanie was talking."

"This is a congenial bunch of fellows, this house. We don't want an ungenial man, no matter who he is, and when we bid you it's because we know you will be happier here than anywhere else on the campus."

"This house stands for congeniality, he went on loudly as the freshman's mouth opened to speak. "There are no clues here like you will find in most houses, and we're well rounded too. We stand for scholarship and for activities as well as athletics. As I said before, you'll find this well-rounded bunch of fellows, and above all they are congenial."

As Beanie paused for breath, Duke took the baton. Looking the freshman hypnotically in the eye he briefly reviewed the national standing of the brotherhood but more important than that, he went on, did Sawtelle know that the bowl, now filled with cigarettes on the table downstairs had been awarded to a Beta Xi last year—the highest honor the senior class could give—and this year the house had five senior hats and two junior?

As Duke opened the album of news paper clippings about great deeds of famous Beta Xi athletes, Elbridge Sawtelle Strawbridge threw a log over the arm of his chair and interrupted.

"What I really want to know is, what freshmen are coming Beta Xi? A smooth boy, this freshman."

Duke proudly gave the list of men sewed up. "The crowd you've been running with, you see."

The freshman did not seem properly impressed. "Some of the crewmen I like are going Pi Rho."

"You mustn't let that influence you, Duke said quickly. "The friendships you make your first term in college don't count for a thing. My best friends today I hardly knew my freshman year. And besides you'll see plenty of those boys, down at crew without being in the same fraternity with them."

"Well, I haven't made up my mind yet, but whichever I go I want you fellows to know I like your crowd a lot. Sawtelle was still on the fence at the beginning of the eighteen-hour silent period, during which no upper classmen could speak to a freshman."

The whole chapter gathered around him with warm handclaps and hearty good nights and good lucks as he left escorted for the last time by a guard of honor to his room in the dorms.

"How did it go out at Melie's?" Beanie asked as soon as the door closed.

"Oh, it might have been worse. Philosophically Duke took a cigarette out of the bowl on the table and lit it. "But I don't see how."

"Where were they when you left?" "Just passed the Columbia boat-house—three miles to go."

Pledge buttons had already been put on the freshmen and a magnificent meal—to be paid for out of the initiation fees—argued upon them, when Duke burst in the door. Excited by the sought out Beanie, who, with several other brothers, was waiting there for him at the tables.

"Sawtelle turn up all right?" "There were scowls and an unfriendly gleam in Beanie's eyes."

"Yeah, you should ask that."

"You don't mean he didn't?" "Just that—he didn't. Hostile silence."

Duke shoved his derby onto the back of his head and passed his hand

"They don't need you," Duke broke through forcibly. "The boy is as good as sewed up already."

"Sure about that? I heard some talk down in the locker about him going Pi Rho."

"Not a chance. We have the straight dope from his roommate that he's coming our way. Besides we can get back before he leaves."

Grommett pulled his lavender-bordered handkerchief half an inch farther out of his pocket and looked fondly at the lavender tie to match. "Lucky I got all dressed up, isn't it?" He climbed in beside Duke.

Five minutes later, with an air of renunciation he blew a full pack of gum in which probably the flavor still lasted and six minutes later he was gingerly enveloping the tiny white hand of an sweet a bit of froth and fluff as ever graced a college town.

"Pleased to meet you," he said in a faint, scared voice, very different from his usual assured boom and rumble. At any other time Duke would have chuckled over the elephant phantasm frightened by the mouse, but at the moment he was in no mood for humor. His soul was full of bitterness as he watched Grommett balancing on the edge of a chair. What would Melie think of him for having a brother like that? What would she think of a fellow with a lavender tie? Melie was so fastidious. He shuddered in misery.

"And when Duke called up, Melie's voice recalled him, and said, 'How about tonight?' I actually broke a date to meet you. That same line—Duke felt a bit resentful, and decided to punish her."

"Melie have you ever heard about Mariposa's famous race at Poughkeepsie?"

Instantly Grommett's face became oratorical. "Mariposa—that's my old alma mater." He turned to Melie. "I might even go so far as to say I rowed on that crew—in fact, I stroked it."

Melie was deeply impressed. "You stroked the championship crew?"

Grommett was gratified. "Oh, I don't know that it was so much."

"You would say that. Suppose you tell me about it and let me decide for myself."

If Grommett had had a tail he would have wagged it. Happily, he laid the race at her feet.

"We had the inside course, see, and that was all to the good on account of the wind—Unfortunately the telephone rang just as Mariposa nosed ahead of Cornell in magnificent response to the cox's command to give her ten."

Melie held up her hand. "Stop! Don't say another word till I get back. I can't bear to miss a syllable."

Duke slipped out and intercepted her in the hall coming back. "Goah, Melie, you're a wonder," he said with genuine admiration, and approached her with a tentative arm. But somehow she was out of his reach.

"Am I?"

"You know I think so. Not many girls—it's pretty low to hand you in to this and then duck out. Do you mind if I go?"

"Do you want to really, Duke?" Her voice was faintly wistful.

"Goah no, but I've got to get back to the house to help work on this freshman—that's the whole idea—and if you'll just keep Brother Grommett's mind off rushing till I get back there I'll be your slave for life. Yes, and I'll be out here tomorrow night with tickets for the theatre. Will you? Can you?"

"Of course, I can. Melie accepted the challenge, and went back into the living room, where Grommett sat away slightly with a far-away look in his eye."

"And then we settled down to a long steady stroke—was the last Duke heard as he quietly closed the front door. He coasted silently for a distance, then let the clutch in and sped to the house. across his brow.

"Grommett—do you suppose, after all Grommett—"

"Yeah, Beanie's voice was heavy with sarcasm. 'Clever of you to guess it. It's too bad you couldn't have thought of it sooner.'

"Oh, is that so?" "Yes, that's so. If you hadn't had that bright idea of taking Grommett—"

"My idea! Was this bunch of deadwood trying to give him the birdies?" "Dana—"

"Suppose it was Dana's idea? You are the one that plumed things."

"That's right, Duke," said Dana, neatly stepping out from under. "I merely made a suggestion. You did not have to follow it."

"How—?" There was a lot Duke did not understand.

"If you hadn't taken Grommett away when we needed him here, we'd have Sawtelle Strawbridge and the laugh on the Pi Rho's," Beanie said.

"Needed him here?" "That dumb frosh—I just got it from his roommate—gave us the air because he hadn't met one in here who knew an oar from a tiller."

Light began to break over Duke. "So that was why he asked if we had a transfer named Grommett here. He was looking for a crewman. And I tried to laugh it off. Goah!"

"A great little fixer you were—not. 'That's the way you feel about it, is it?' Duke might blame himself, but he wasn't taking it from any one else. Try and get me to do anything for this house again. Just try—"

Regrettably, unbrotherlike recriminations continued until interrupted by the shriek of a siren splitting the air outside. There was a shriek of brakes above the shriek of the siren, and a cowboy yell above it all. Heads were popping out all along Fraternity Row as the Beta Xi's tumbled out of the door.

Brother Grommett, Melie's car, Duke saw. She was almost hidden by Grommett's bulk but her head was on a level with his. She must be sitting on some one's lap.

"Come on, Broha," followed Grommett. "Here's another pledge."

It was the lap of Elbridge Sawtelle Strawbridge that Melie was sitting on. "I didn't feel quite right going back on you fellows last night," Grommett's voice boomed out over the cheers and congratulations, "so we did a little snooping around the gym after. Those Pi Rho frosh were too buddy with Straw here, to suit me, so I got Melie to kidnap him and keep him occupied till the silent period was up and I could give him the works, and here he is. We may have a baby chapter out at Mu, but we get our man."

"You've got the Beta Xi spirit all right, Brother Grommett." The admiring voices were entirely sincere.

Duke was the only one to stay behind. Melie certainly deserved a reward, he thought. He'd take her to dinner as well as the theatre.

"You go right in, Brother Grommett," he wanted you at the head of the table. Don't worry about Melie—I'll take care of her."

"Thanks, Broh Fletcher; some other time. After what Melie's done for the 'rat I'm going to give her a big evening—feed and show."

"But—but Duke and I—Melie stayed to protest."

For answer Grommett slipped the little car into gear and gave it the gun.

Melie had the grace to turn and blow a good-by kiss to Duke and his theatre tickets, but before she was out of sight he saw her smuggle a note to Grommett. Evidently she liked a case man.

IS THE TIDE
NOW TURNING?The consensus of opinion among people who have travelled around in recent months is that this is a favored community. While the crop outlook is not quite what we would wish it is better than that in many other parts of the country. One man told me Advocate that the crops in the immediate district were the best he had seen his year.A point that is often overlooked in discussing conditions in the town saying the Red Deer Advocate is the comparatively large number of people who are as well or better off than they were last year. In conversation with a good citizen the other day, we counted quite a number of families who were living on the same salaries that they had last year, and who were consequently better off by the amount of the fall in the cost of living, which groceries alone is about 28 per cent. The actual reduction in total living cost would be less than this figure, but it would be considerable. Speaking generally, dominion, provincial and city officials have not suffered salary cuts. Bank men are in the same happy position, and the senior railway men holding regular runs are getting the same money, although the incomes of junior men through lack of running are heavily reduced. There are a good many other men who have not had their incomes reduced, though the average business man is expecting a much smaller return than he got last year.
The men who are suffering are the unemployed, the under-employed and the farmers.The feeling seems to be a bit better this month than it has been, and it is probable that we are going to move ahead from now on. It is a good thing in times like these to look over your house and see if there aren't some small repairs that could be done with advantage. Material and labor are never likely to be cheaper than they are today. Have a look at your clothes and see if you couldn't do very nicely with some new clothes.
The prices of clothing are probably lower today than they have been for years, or than they are likely to be again. A little money wisely spent in times like these is a very powerful agent in getting the wheels of industry turning again at their proper pace.

PERMANENCE

Sometimes in this restless, ever-changing life of ours says the Canadian News we stop for a moment to look with longing at an older, more stable civilization, where people expect to "stay put." We wish that we,
too, could count on living in the same place for a lifetime, on getting thor-oughly acquainted with one spot, at least, on the globe.While our country was building so rapidly, while there was still so much room to move on and on and on,
there was some sense to this eternal flitting from one temporary home to another, from one incipient city to another. Families never knew when to stop and settle down. Always there beckoned the fascinating unknown; always there was the doubt or the hope that farther on there would be luck, success, fortune.To day there is no such excuse.
The new land is filled with cities, villages, farms. There is no great unknown calling to the pioneer that he dormant in all of us. But the real spirit of early days lingers on in this age and expresses itself in the conscious demand for change.Sometimes in our mad dashing over the splendid new highways of today we pause for a moment in a by-way so look with homesick eyes at a forgotten village with wide brick-paved streets, lined with gracious houses, arched with towering graceful chimneys.Sometimes we glimpse a quiet, enduring homestead of the older days still standing, serene, dignified, beautiful in the midst of its old-time garden.At such moments we realize poignantly a little of the joy we have missed in life—the simple, deep, lasting joy of permanence—the security of roots!It is supreme joy, well worth the sacrifice of many of the feverish activities in which modern Canadians think they must engage and which in the end prove non-essential and unsatisfying.
To win that sense of permanence and that comfortable knowledge that now you are really settled down with every prospect of staying there for the rest of your life; of getting acquainted with your neighborhood and neighbors; of getting to be a personally friend of the big, old tree out in front, and at least an acquaintance of the bird residents therein; to know the same sun will strike through the same window this day next year and the next; and the next—all that is a boon which the tired wanderer from flat to flat, from house to house, or even from city to city, will appreciate with heart-felt sighs of relief.

LONG-LENT WANTS

A scientific journal suggests a number of much-needed inventions.
Strangely, however, it omits from its list the following:A self-washing automobile An airplane that is not subject to the law of gravitation.
A golf ball with a phonograph at-tachment that will sing "Here I am."
An angler's scales that will corroborate the fisherman's story.A berry basket that will prevent all the best berries from staying at the top.A telephone only bell that will inform us who is on the other end of the wire.An attachment for home radios that will pass the collection plate
after the Sunday sermon—Boston

WIT AND HUMOR

Boring Guest: "That's a strange clock you have in the hall."
Host: "Yes, we only it. 'The Guest'" Guest: "Why is that?"
Host: "It won't go."Trump: "Can you spare me a pair of very old shoes, ma'am?" Lady: "But those you have on look like new."Trump: "I know, ma'am, and that's what's ruining my trade.""Well, Betty, how did you like your first ride in the elevator?"
"It was lovely, mother; we got into a little room and the upstairs came down."Doris (after the proposal): "I'm sorry, Teddy. Perhaps some other girl will make you forget me."
Ted: "I can never forget you." Doris: "Oh, yes, you can. You did it very nicely on my last birthday.""Now which kind of music do you desire to become proficient in?" said
the professor to the new pupil.
"Oh, classical, by all means," replied the young woman."I am very pleased to hear you express this preference.""Yes. When one plays classical music hardly anybody knows what it is, and you make a mistake or not."Mr. A. L. Barrett, of Newfoundland who paid us a visit yesterday, boasts of being father of fifteen children, and, incidentally remarks: "My wife looks so young and sweet, I'm almost tempted to marry her again."A police officer met an organ grinder on the street, and said: "Have you a license to play? If not, you must accompany me.""With pleasure," answered the street musician, "what will you sing?"BLUEBERRIES AND HUCKLEBERRIES

By Anne Schuyler

Blueberries and huckleberries are first cousins. As a matter of fact they are double cousins and quite often mistaken for each other. Their flavor is quite similar and any recipe calling for one may have the other substituted provided it is more easily obtainable.The blueberry is extremely popular with many. A number of jars on the emergency shelf will be a valuable asset to any housewife. The minerals and salts of the berries combined with the quick-energy furnished by the sugar, make a dish of huckleberries or blueberries healthful as well as delicious.

Huckleberry Conserve

2 cups huckleberries
2 cups tart apple, diced
3 cups sugar
1/2 cup nut meats, chopped
Juice of 1 lemon
Grated rind of 1/4 lemon Combine all the ingredients except the nut meats. Cook until the mixture is thick and clear. Add the nut meats just before taking from the fire. Pour into clean hot glasses. Seal tight.

Blueberry and Crab Apple Jam

Equal measures of blueberries and crab apples may be used, or one-third as much of the berries as crab apples. Remove the cores from the crab apples and pare them. Chop fine. Add enough water almost to cover them and cook for ten minutes. Add the berries and the sugar, using two-thirds as much sugar as fruit, by measure. Cook the jam until it is thick and clear. Pour into clean, hot glasses. Seal tight.

Daimson Plum Conserve

2 pounds Daimson plums
1 1/2 pounds sugar
1 cup English walnuts
1 lemon, juice and grated rind
1 pound seedless raisins
Wash the raisins and plump them
by steaming them for 30 minutes.
minutes. Remove the seeds from the plums and weigh the fruit. Add the sugar, lemon and raisins. Cook the mixture until it is thick and clear.
Pour boiling water over the nuts,
and let them stand for 2 minutes.
Drain the nuts and rub them with a coarse towel to remove skins. Cut or chop them and add them to the mixture just before removing it from the heat.

START RIGHT

Have you a boy or girl who has lost interest in his or her music studies? If so, perhaps the trouble can be traced to a wrong start. After a life-time of thought to music and many years of teaching, I am more than ever convinced that the very young child needs the most experienced teacher. Call now and arrange for lessons; terms are moderate.

RIDING IN THE CLOUDS

The pictures show: a typical trail ride,
camp scene, feeding a
river, and the sterling type of cowboy, who is guide, friend and counselor to the disciples of the saddle.Up, out and away from the cares
and limitations of modern life;
sharing the joys of long days in the saddle in flower-studded Alplands and stately passes with a goodly company of kindred spirits; happy evenings round the campfires and restful, health-giving nights in the wine-like atmosphere of the mountains; such is the life of the Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies, on their annual expeditions from Banff and Lake Louise, which have long since become famous items in the summer programs of the two great Canadian Pacific Rail-way hotels at these renowned holiday places. Carefully planned rides, of varying durations to suit
all comers; experienced guides, cooks and horse-wranglers; a pack train always ahead to welcome the riders at the evening meal, with the night's camp all ready for occupation; horses that are as sure-footed as goats all contribute to making
this form of holiday one of the most original
and enjoyable on the American continent. Canadian Pacific lines carry enthusiasts and new recruits from the four corners of the earth to Banff and Lake Louise, each summer.
This year the official four-day ridewill be held from July 30 to August 2, covering 52 miles through Banff National Park, in territory with special appeal to the photographer and fisherman, and will be followed by a 10-day ride of greater mileage

INVESTIGATIONS OF GREAT COMMERCIAL VALUE TO PRODUCER & CONSUMER

(Experimental Farms Note)

The first and most important piece of horticultural work at an experimental station in a newly settled district is to determine which varieties of fruits and vegetables are the best for the settlers to plant. Before the Station was established settlers lost thousands of dollars in purchasing fruit trees of varieties quite unsuited to their climatic conditions and varieties of vegetables were grown which were not satisfactory.
Now, when a new settler or an old one desires to set out an orchard or small fruit plantation or to grow vegetables all he has to do is to consult the list of recommended varieties based on the results of the tests
we have made at the Dominion Experimental Stations. Much loss is in this way avoided.

The McIntosh apple, one of the few well-known apples of Canadian origin is an outstanding variety, thought by many to be the best apple in the world and certainly the most popular apple in Canada and commanding the highest price but, unfortunately, its season is relatively short. Through the work of the Division of Horticulture new varieties have been originated and introduced which give apples of the McIntosh type from Summer to the time of the McIntosh.
Some of those which may be mentioned are Melba, Joyce, Hume and Lobo.
The Melba apple has been planted by the thousands and is proving very successful. It is equal to the McIntosh in quality and is ready for use in August at a time when the public is very eager for apples and had, in the past, to content with Duchesse of Olenburg or other varieties greatly inferior in quality. This apple is bringing profit to the producer and delight to the consumer. Other good varieties of apples and other fruits have been originated but space will not permit mentioning them.

Early vegetables usually give the greatest profit to the producer and the greatest pleasure to the consumer. The origination and introduction of the Banting and Pickensham corn, two very early and very sweet varieties, has been a great boon to those parts of Canada where sweet corn was grown with difficulty and the Banting, especially, has proved very profitable to commercial growers.
Alicia tomato has been very valuable because of its earliness, and Ruby Ruby, also originated in the Division of Horticulture, is one of the most outstanding varieties in Canada.

TELLS OF UNUSUAL RELIABILITY, ECONOMY &
GOOD PERFORMANCE

Some time ago we published an account of a Ford car that had been driven 24,000 miles in a year.

The article created much comment and brought many letters telling of the unusual reliability, economy and long life of the Ford. Here is an interesting letter from a Ford owner in Hamilton Ontario.

"I noticed in one of your recent advertisements that a Ford owner had driven his automobile 24,000 miles in a year and didn't have the head off until he had gone 20,000 miles. I would say this is fair, but just wait—
"In the first twelve months I had my Ford I drove it 29,000 miles. The head was taken off the engine until 25,000 miles and the battery has never been out of the car."

"I started with four tires and a spare and I didn't have to buy a new tire until I had gone 31,000 miles.
The second, I bought at 32,000 miles. The other three tires have gone 35,110 miles and still look good for another 5000 miles."

"My Ford has certainly given me good service and I'm mighty proud of it. Theway I feel I'll always be a Ford buyer."

Letters like this are indicative of the substantial worth of the Ford and the high quality and careful craftsmanship that are built into every part.

In every detail of construction it is made to endure—to serve you faithfully and well for many thousands of miles. The price is low because of volume production and the unusual Ford manufacturing facilities.

The seed method system of orchard practice has been shown by careful experiments by the Division of Horticulture to be a very economical method of growing apple trees and with the use of fertilizer has resulted in more regular and larger crops of apples particularly in the Province of Quebec.

The information obtained from the study of plant nutrition in the Division of Horticulture, by which it is learned what are the actual plant food requirements of fruits, has been of great value to fruit growers. Nitrates had been used almost exclusively by fruit growers and results in recent years had not been as satisfactory. The complete fertilizer recommended by the Division of Horticulture, based on the studies in plant nutrition, have been adopted very extensively by the Nova Scotia fruit growers, especially, and are proving of much value to them.

In British Columbia, one of the principal varieties of apples the Jonathan, had not kept satisfactorily, the flesh turning brown and breaking down in transit. This was resulting in great loss to the growers, both directly and indirectly, as dealers hesi-tated to buy fruit which might be found unfit for consumption when it began to be used. A special investigation was made of this by the Horticultural Department of the Summerland Experimental Station in British Columbia and as a result this "Jonathan Breakdown" can be avoided if the grower takes proper precautions.
This same Station has contributed valuable information on the storage of different varieties of apples.

One of the latest pieces of work conducted by the Division of Horticulture, in association with the Dehydration and By-Products Committees of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, has been experiments in drying apples. A very large quantity of apple goes to waste every year which, if properly handled, will, it is believed, bring fair returns to fruit growers instead of no revenue, as at present. From experiments conducted in Nova Scotia and Ontario this year it has been shown that a bottled syrup can be made in Canada comparing very favourably with the best English cider. The market possibilities for such a product are great.

NOTED EXHIBITION SPECIALIST TAKES CHARGE OF WORLD'S GRAIN SHOW BUILDING

World's Grain Exhibition and Conference Building

J. O. Turcotte, Canadian Exhibition Commissioner, has arrived in Regina for the purpose of conferring with members of the executive and exhibition committee of the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference to be held at Regina in 1932. Mr. Turcotte will have charge of the interior decoration of the building specially erected to house the 1932 exhibition and conference.

Recently, Mr. Turcotte returned to Canada from the British Trade Exposition at Buenos Aires, Argentina, where he had complete charge of the Canadian Pavilion. He is expected to remain in Regina for a few days in conference with various officials of the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference.

Mr. Turcotte, who is a French-Canadian by birth and a Paris trained architect, was appointed Canadian Exhibition Commissioner in 1925. For some years prior he had been assistant exhibition commissioner. He was responsible, almost in its entirety, for the Canadian pavilion at the British Empire Exhibition, Wembley, England, 1924-25, and for the Canadian Pavilion at New Zealand in 1924.
He was also in charge of the decorative features of the buildings which housed the World's Poultry Congress at Ottawa in 1927, the Canadian pavilion at the Antwerp Exposition in 1930, the Canadian exhibit at the World's Poultry Congress at the Crystal Palace, London, England, last year, the Canadian exhibit at the Paris Exposition the same year and the Canadian Pavilion at the British Trade Exposition at Buenos Aires last March.

On two occasions Mr. Turcotte has been signally honored. At the opening of the Wembley Exhibition, attended by over 110,000 people, he was one of five presented, by command, to His Majesty the King, and at Antwerp he was also presented to the King of the Belgians, receiving congratulations on both occasions for the excellence of his work.

World's Grain Exhibition and Conference Building

the plans and specifications of the building in connection with the Buenos Aires Exposition. The Canadian Pavilion was actually
built in London, England, and consisted of a wooden building about 80 feet high, 100 yards long and 40 yards wide, made in 35,000
pieces. The pieces were numbered,
packed into thousands of cases, the
whole weighing about 1,200 tons.
They were shipped to Buenos Aires
and upon his arrival Mr. Turcotte
laid out the work, set the building
up, planned and erected the decorative features and had the pavilion
ready for the public nearly two weeks before the official date of opening. English newspapers, in commenting upon this remarkable
feat, described the building, at the time of packing, as the world's greatest jigsaw puzzle.

The above picture lay-out shows the magnificent new building erected on the exhibition grounds at Regina to house the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference in 1932.
The cost of the building and decorations is approximately $250,000.
It has an area of 150,000 square feet with an exhibit frontage in excess of one and one-half miles. The building is practically ready to hand over to the National Committee of the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference who, in turn, will place it at the disposal of Mr. Tur-cotte (below) for the purpose of interior decoration.

work of the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference he has chosen seeds of various kinds which will permit him to work out the most elaborate decorative features.

Those who have been associated with Mr. Turcotte at former world expositions state that he has built up a reputation of never being late.
All Canadian pavilions of which he has had charge at expositions in different parts of the world have been ready for the public by opening day. He created a noteworthy record at Wembley in 1924 when the Canadian Pavilion was the only one of the hundreds of structures actually complete in all detail at the hour set for opening.

Mr. Turcotte also established another record in connection with
the Buenos Aires Exposition. The Canadian Pavilion was actually
built in London, England, and consisted of a wooden building about 80 feet high, 100 yards long and 40 yards wide, made in 35,000
pieces. The pieces were numbered,
packed into thousands of cases, the
whole weighing about 1,200 tons.
They were shipped to Buenos Aires
and upon his arrival Mr. Turcotte
laid out the work, set the building
up, planned and erected the decorative features and had the pavilion
ready for the public nearly two
weeks before the official date of
opening. English newspapers, in
commenting upon this remarkable
feat, described the building, at the
time of packing, as the world's
greatest jigsaw puzzle.

Too Much ACID

MANY people, two hours after eating, suffer indigestion as they call it. It is usually excess acid. Correct it with an alkali. The best way, the quick, harmless and efficient way, is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It has remained for 50 years the standard with physicians. One spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in stomach acids, and at once. The symptoms disappear in five minutes.

You will never use crude methods when you know this better method. And you will never suffer from excess acid when you prove out this easy relief.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. 25c and 50c a bottle—any drugstore. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Company since 1875.

MODERNISTIC MAID

thing. For a brief second she was held close to him; she did not struggle, but relaxed gratefully in his arms with a little sigh. Then abruptly, unbelievably, he had lifted her in his arms, twisted her about, set down on the top steps and had her across his knees, administering a good old-fashioned spanking.

She was amazed, bewildered. Her first impulse was to shriek and kick, but before her astonishment lessened enough to get her into action, Dana had set her on her feet again.

"There—you shouldn't be able to forget me now," said Dana, and was off down the walk. His car purred off, leaving Gay, still standing, dumb and dizzy.

Gay, the modern, cried bitter puzzled tears into her pillow that night. What did Dana mean? And how could you cope with a man like that? Well, soon he would be gone out of her life.

In the days that followed Dana's departure Gay withdrew into herself. Before she had drifted along, leading the others. It is true, but still drifting on the tide of the approval and emulation, now for the first time in her life she began to question herself. Where was she drifting? And why? Those were questions that seemed unanswerable.

Gradually it came to her that the life she was leading was a futile and useless thing. She admitted frankly to herself that her only purpose was to have a good time and eventually—find a husband. That was the sum of her purposes and her capabilities.

Little by little Gay began dropping out of things; no longer was she the acknowledged arbiter of fashions and changes. Then one morning she surprised her mother by appearing at the breakfast table with him.

"Going into town to shop?" he inquired.

She sipped her tomato juice thoughtfully. Then: "Dad, would you care if I took a business course? You know, learned typing and shorthand and—whatever it is you learn?"

He looked at her piquant face, which had grown considerably older in the last few weeks.

"Why, no, Gay," he said gently.

For two months Gay lived in a welter of hoots and curves and even in her dreams her fingers flitted over a dream keyboard. She bought a typewriter to practice on at home and at any time her mother might hear the old-fashioned click of the keys.

Gay had a job three weeks before the fact leaked out a home. Her mother was horrified.

"Working in a garage! Of all things a garage! If you had to work, why in the world didn't you choose a lawyers office?"

Gay grinned. "We working girls can't pick and choose," she said primly. She didn't add that there had been a little sentiment attached to it. Bill Murphy's garage was the one where Dana always left his car when repairs were necessary, and Gay had heard in a roundabout way that the combination stenographer and book-keeper was leaving. She went down, applied for the job and got it. She said her name was Alice Strouville, which it was—Alice Gay, but the way she ran the name together Bill Murphy thought she said Strouville, and never once connected her with the Strouvelles of Marshfield Way.

Gay liked working in the garage. Bill Murphy called her Alice and the mechanics did likewise.

"Alice, where's the time sheet on that Smith job?" and "Alice, did you make out that order for two vacuum tanks?" they would say. It made her feel very important and necessary in the scheme of things.

On days when she wasn't so busy she would watch the mechanics take cars apart and put them together again. She had driven a car for five years, but she'd never had an inkling of why they ran but inside of three months after she went to Bill Murphy's garage she knew a great deal about their mechanism.

After she had got well started in her work Gay began to go out a little. Not as she used to, of course, but once or twice a week. Usually to the dance at the club, because that came on Saturday night and she could sleep late the next morning. When her friends were too curious about what she was doing Gay would say solemnly that she was learning a trade. Now and then some one she knew would come to the garage, but they never came into the little office where Gay miled, and the neatly-typed bills that they received later were unrecognizable. Certainly Gay's mother never mentioned what Gay was doing.

Gay no longer wore brightly colored rouge and fingernail lacquer. The boys at the shop would have hooted at her. Sometimes she even neglected to powder her nose. Her dresses were plain and serviceable.

"Gay," her mother would protest, "you look like a servant girl."

"I never can please you, can I mother," Gay would return. "Besides, if I wore the kind of clothes to work that you seem to think I should, the cleaning bill would be more than my salary!"

"Pooh! Call $20 a week a salary?" "Well," said Gay proudly, "I've had raised $2.50 since I started."

In spite of all her work Gay still thought of Dana more than she felt she would. He wrote her now and then short friendly letters that might mean something but probably didn't. But the thought of him wasn't as poignant as it had been at first.

"Work," said Gay grimly to herself. "Work and the old clinical attitude! In another six months I'll have forgotten Dana Mitchell!"

But in her inmost heart she didn't believe it.

"MONEY TALKS! this year reduced prices in lumber, paint, blacksmith coal and all builder's supplies at the Atlas yard. Phone 57."

PLEASE PRESERVE PEACHES
"Please preserve peaches" is now being heard all over the country, because preserved peaches please those who make such requests. Put up plenty of peaches this year. Not only in your usual way, but in forms that may be new to you. Sugar is cheap. Peaches are plentiful and delicious. Why not stock up your preserve closet for the cold days that are to come? Try these two novel peach recipes:

Sweet Pickled Peaches
7 pounds peaches
5 pounds sugar
2 cups vinegar
1 cup water
3 inches stick cinnamon
Cloves

Peel the peaches. Make a syrup of the sugar, vinegar, and water. Add the stick cinnamon. Stick two whole cloves in each peach. Cook a few at a time in the syrup, simmering gently until tender. Put in sterilized fruit jars. Cook the syrup until thick. Remove cinnamon. Pour boiling hot syrup over peaches. Seal jars tight.

Tutti Frutti Preserves
1 pound quinces, peeled
1 pound sweet apples cored and peeled
1 pound pears, cored and peeled 3 lemons
3 pounds sugar

Slice the fruit. Cook apples and quinces separately until they are tender. If the pears are hard they also should be cooked. Drain off the juice add it to the sugar and boil the mixture until it is a medium thick syrup. Add the fruit, the juice of two lemons, and one lemon sliced very thin. Cook until the preserve is thick and clear. Seal in clean hot jars.

Feeding tobacco to sheep is the latest device to check internal parasites. The tobacco is given with salt in the proportion of ten pounds of salt to one of crushed tobacco leaf.

Latest available estimates place Canada's forest resources at 224,304 million cubic feet of standing timber, capable of yielding 424,637 million feet board measure of sawn lumber and 1,121,993 thousand cords of pulpwood, ties, poles and other smaller materials.

Western Canadians are showing resolution coupled with a high degree of industry, was the comment made by Grant Hall, vice-president, Canadian Pacific Railway, on his return from a recent tour of the company's western lines.

Trail riding in the Canadian Rockies has made a strong appeal to Lord Duncannon, son of His Excellency the Governor-General, who with the Hon. Arthur Ponsonby and Major Dollan have been staying at the Banff Springs Hotel.

Intensive campaigns against grasshoppers, wireworms, wheat stem sawfly, cutworm, potato beetle, cabbage butterfly, root maggots are being conducted throughout the west this summer and fall with a special organization in the field.

"Buyers' Week," which has been a great success in the past, will be held for the fourth time in Montreal commencing August 10 next. At the last one in February upwards of 1,100 buyers came to Montreal and purchased in round figures $960,000 worth of Canadian-made goods.

A man catching a fish is not news unless the fish is an outside, but a fish catching a man rates a big type head. This happened at Lake Minnewanka, near Banff, recently when an angler was pulled off the pier into the lake by the sudden strike of a monster trout. Constable James of Calgary put off in a boat and landed both fish and fisherman.

Six days, nine hours and eleven minutes was the time of the record run of the "Empress of Japan," 26,000-ton flagship of the Canadian Pacific fleet, on her last trip from Yokohama to Honolulu, while a double record was made when the same ship completed the voyage from Honolulu to Victoria in four days, nine hours and 16 minutes.

For the second time in the past three years, Canadian Pacific Railway police are all-Canada revolver champions. The railway's Ontario team defeated Royal Canadian Mounted Police, of Lethbridge, in the finals for the trophy recently. The railway police scored 1410 out of a possible 1600 against the Mounties 1352 thus becoming Dominion Open Revolver Police Champions.
